WELCOME TO METRO PHILLY

SAM NEWHOUSE, REPORTER

Pit bulls have long been judged by their breed as dangerous dogs. But a trainer at Throw Away Dogs, which trains stray dogs to become K-9s, vowed that she could train a pit bull to become a K-9. Now, she's declaring success. Read more on page 4 and at metrophilly.us.

REPUBLICANS TO TRUMP: LET MUELLER DO HIS JOB

1 GOP senators warned President Donald Trump on Sunday not to fire special counsel Robert Mueller, and said the president must let federal investigators looking into Russian meddling in the U.S. election do their jobs. The president renewed his Twitter attacks on the FBI and Mueller's probe since the firing on Friday of the bureau's former deputy director, Andrew McCabe, two days before he was eligible to retire with a full pension. Republican Sen. Jeff Flake, who has criticized Trump, said the president's comments appeared to be aimed at Mueller. Sen. Lindsey Graham said if Trump were to dismiss Mueller it would mark "the beginning of the end of his presidency." AshLee Strong, a spokeswoman for House Speaker Paul Ryan, said: "As the speaker has always said, Mr. Mueller and his team should be able to do their job." Read more on page 17.

TRUMP PLAN SEEKS DEATH PENALTY FOR DRUGS

2 President Donald Trump will unveil a plan on Monday to combat the opioid addiction crisis that includes seeking the death penalty for drug dealers and urging Congress to toughen sentencing laws for drug traffickers, White House officials said on Sunday. The White House plan will also seek to cut opioid prescriptions by a third over the next three years by promoting practices that reduce overprescription of opioids in federal healthcare programs, officials told a news briefing. Trump will outline his proposals at an event in New Hampshire. "The Department of Justice will seek the death penalty against drug traffickers when it's appropriate under current law," said Andrew Bremberg, director of Trump's Domestic Policy Council. Read more on page 16.

PENNSYLVANIA TICKET WINS POWERBALL JACKPOT

4 One lucky winning ticket was sold in Pennsylvania for an estimated $455 million Powerball jackpot drawn Saturday night, officials said. This is one of the biggest pots in the multistate lottery's history, after 19 straight drawings failed to produce a grand prize winner. The winning numbers were 22, 57, 59, 60, 66 and Powerball 7. The odds of winning Saturday's draw were 1 in 292 million. The grand prize winner has the choice of taking the $455 million jackpot doled out over 29 years, or taking a one-time, lump-sum payment of $269.4 million. The last Powerball drawing to produce a jackpot winner was on Jan. 6, when a single ticket sold in New Hampshire won $559.7 million. The winner, who went under the name "Good Karma Family 2018," chose the lump-sum cash option of $352 million.

CONGRESS AIMS TO END SHUTDOWN SQUABBLES

5 Congress, facing yet another government shutdown deadline at midnight on Friday this week, will try to approve a massive spending bill that would end lawmakers' nettlesome budget infighting, at least through Sept. 30. Republican leaders in the House hope to soon unveil the product of long negotiations over a $1 trillion spending bill. It would fund all of the federal government's activities, except for the gigantic "mandatory entitlement" programs such as Social Security and Medicare, which do not have to be renewed annually. The Congress was supposed to have completed this work by Sept. 30, 2017, but it has not done that. Instead, the government has been running on a series of short-term, stopgap funding measures. As of Sunday, negotiators were still trying to put the finishing touches on the longer-term bill.

Did You Know?

If you were involved in a motor vehicle accident with a hit-and-run driver who flees the scene, and you or the owner of the vehicle that you were in has purchased uninsured motorist benefits coverage, you may be covered.

However, you MUST report the hit-and-run accident to the Police within 30 days.

Under Pennsylvania law, if a hit-and-run accident is not reported to the Police within 30 days of the accident, insurance companies do not have to honor the uninsured motorist benefits coverage which you, or the owner of the vehicle you were in, paid for.

Be aware, reporting the accident to the insurance company IS NOT ENOUGH!

Even if you are only a passenger in a vehicle involved in a hit-and-run accident, you should still report it to the Police. If the owner or driver of the vehicle (who actually purchased the insurance) fails to file a report, you will lose your rights.

If you have involved in an accident with a hit-and-run driver, make sure you personally call the Police. If the Police refuse to come to the scene, go to the nearest Police Station and file a Report. Otherwise, you risk losing any uninsured motorist benefits that you might be entitled to.

Throw Away Dogs took a chance on Wildflower, who was once a stray pit bull, and found her to be well-suited as a police K-9 after lengthy training. ALL PHOTOS KAIT MOORE

Pit bull turned into police dog by Philly's Throw Away Dogs

One stray had "off-the-charts energy," but Throw Away Dogs recognized her potential as a working dog.

SAM NEWHOUSE
sam.newhouse@metro.us

When Philadelphia's Throw Away Dogs Project first got requests to work with a hyperactive pit bull named Wildflower who was wearing out adopted owners and foster parents, they were skeptical.

"They said to me that they had a pit bull that they feel would be wonderful for our program. I quickly dismissed it, to be honest with you," said Throw Away Dogs co-founder Carol Skaziak. "In comes this energetic pit bull that was so loveable but completely off the charts with the energy. … I knew the moment that we started testing her that this was not going to work out, because she evaluated horrible. … She was just not understanding the games of our training program."

But months later, the seemingly impossible has happened. On Sunday, Skaziak handed Wildflower's leash over to Chief Joe Chitwood of the Wetumka, Oklahoma, Police Department, where Wildflower is headed to get certified and hit the streets as a K-9 narcotics detection dog, during a graduation ceremony at the Fraternal Order of Police Lodge 5.

Wildflower's journey began at the Humane Society of North Myrtle Beach in South Carolina, where she was sheltered after being discovered running the streets with no microchip or collar.

Tina Hunter, executive director of the Humane Society, said Wildflower was first adopted out to a family who returned her just two months later.

"We recognized at the shelter that she just cannot be a normal family pet," Hunter said.

Hunter referred her to foster mom Katharine Keaton, who has experience domesticating pit bulls. But Keaton couldn't tame Wildflower either, despite every trick she knew, including exercising her for 6-plus miles a day.

"That was the toughest foster I've ever had," she said. "Not even I could tame her energy."

When Keaton learned about Throw Away Dogs from a co-worker, she reached out and refused to take no for an answer.

When Wildflower got to Philadelphia, as Skaziak said, it didn't look good. But Throw Away Dogs head trainer Bruce "Will" Meyers brought Wildflower home, where she continued to struggle with training. But after a few weeks, he had an "a-ha" moment after Wildflower accidentally knocked over a bag full of toys sent from South Carolina, including some lacrosse balls.

"A K-9 officer should be treated with the same respect as a human officer ..."

Carol Skaziak

"The bag fell over, the balls hit the ground and that was it. She was insane over these blue balls," he said. "We then had our training system, and that was all it took."

Chief Chitwood said Wildflower, who will be stepping in to replace a retiring K-9, can help stop and deter the illegal drug trafficking through Oklahoma that has been a problem in his hometown.

"It's absolutely essential to have a narcotics K-9 with the drug trafficking we have running through our area. They're absolutely the best tools we have," Chitwood said.

For Throw Away Dogs, which has rescued and trained 23 dogs, Wildflower's graduation is another step forward.

"No dog is a throw away dog," Skaziak said. "A K-9 officer should be treated with the same respect as a human officer, whether they are working, not working or retired, whether they are alive or they are deceased."

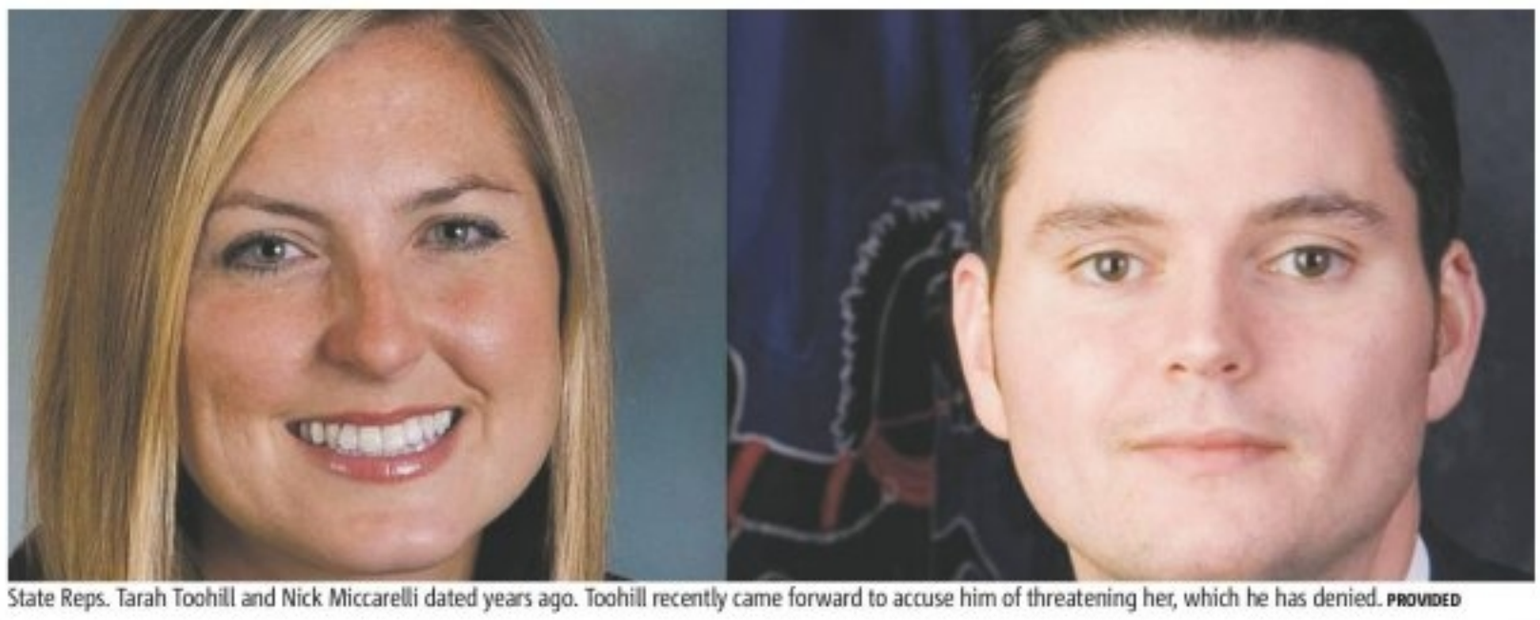
Two PA state reps, former lovers, happy with three-year restraining order



State Reps. Tarah Toohill and Nick Miccarelli dated years ago. Toohill recently came forward to accuse him of threatening her, which he has denied. PROVIDED Pennsylvania Republican state Rep. Nick Miccarelli has been in hot water since the Inquirer first reported that two women who formerly dated him accused him of violent behavior.

One woman claimed that he forced her to have sex during their relationship, and, after their breakup, may have drugged her and then performed non-consensual activities. The other claimed he threatened her, pointed a gun at her, and during an argument in his car drove at high speeds while threatening to kill them both. Miccarelli has denied any wrongdoing and stated that he will not resign.

On Thursday, the second alleged victim, who recently identified herself as fellow Republican state Rep. Tarah Toohill (R-116th/Luzerne County), obtained a three-year "protection from abuse" order against Miccarelli (R-162nd/Delco). But Miccarelli also declared the hearing a "victory," since he did not have to admit any wrongdoing, the Delco Daily Times reported, and will continue to be allowed to enter the Capitol building in Harrisburg, albeit without his firearm.

"We are very pleased with the outcome and got everything that we were coming here to do, and we are safer today. And that's what we were trying to do, is secure our safety. My safety. We are safer today," Toohill told the Delco Daily Times.

The abuse order was reportedly agreed to during a closed-door mediation, and Miccarelli also said he was happy with the agreement.

"Today's consent agreement before Judge Jeffrey Smith was a victory for justice and vindication for Rep. Nick Miccarelli," Miccarelli's spokesman, Frank Keel, said in statement. "From the outset, Nick has maintained his innocence and today's mutually agreed upon consent order affirms his innocence, after he was finally afforded an opportunity to present the facts." Toohil has not accused Miccarelli of sexual assault but, in addition to pointing a gun at her, hitting her and threatening to kill them both, while driving claimed he has engaged in harassing and stalking behavior at the Capitol and threatened to blackmail her by releasing private photographs.

"... that's what we were trying to do, is secure our safety. My safety. We are safer today."

State Rep. Tarah Toohill

The other victim, an unidentified political consultant, claimed that Miccarelli forced her to have sex while they were dating, and while she was visiting him after breaking up, claims he may have drugged her and then while she was unconscious initiated alleged "non-consensual sexual behavior."

In court papers filed ahead of the protection from abuse hearing, Miccarelli's lawyer claimed Toohill's claims "are solely the vengeful words of a former lover with an agenda," Pennlive reported. "[Miccarelli] is a respected politician whose reputation is being slandered by an ex-girlfriend who inaccurately believes Miccarelli was responsible for disseminating a YouTube video showing Toohil with drug paraphernalia and kissing another woman." Vanessa Trump called Donald Jr. 'the one with the retarded dad'

It's part of the beautiful story about the night she met Donald Trump Jr.

letters@metro.us

When it was announced Thursday that Donald Trump Jr. and his wife, Vanessa Trump, had filed for divorce, gossip addicts grieved upon hearing that terms of the split had already been amiably worked out, anticipating a dearth of the embarrassing, entertaining details that accompany these events in the lives of the mega-rich.

The New York Post resurfaced the fact that when Vanessa met Trump Jr., she referred to him as "the one with the retarded dad." What's more, it has to do with the night they met.

In a 2006 interview with The New York Times, Vanessa Trump recounted that the future president made the match between her and Trump Jr. At a 2003 fashion show, Donald Trump approached her and said, "I wanted to introduce you to my son Donald Trump Jr."

Vanessa said the three had a "brief, awkward conversation." During intermission, "Donald [Sr.] comes back up to me again, 'I don't think you've met my son Donald Trump Jr.'" She responded, "Yeah, we just met five minutes ago."

She and Don Jr. met for the third time at a birthday party weeks later, where they talked. A lightbulb went off, and Vanessa told Don Jr., "Wait, you're the one with the retarded dad!"

Two years later, they were married at Mar-a-Lago. Don Jr. and Vanessa Trump, both 40, have five children.

A major boy band from your past is coming out with their own tequila

Hint: It'll rock your body.

SAM BRODSKY
Samantha.Brodsky@metro.us

The Backstreet Boys will be releasing a new brand of tequila. GETTY IMAGES

Oh my God, they're back again — the Backstreet Boys, who formed in 1993 when some of the iconic members weren't even old enough to drive, are getting a license of the liquor variety. BSB told Tasting Table during a two-day performance at Cancun's Moon Palace resort that they're venturing into the tequila business.

"I like a good reposado or añejo," Kevin Richardson told the site, discussing his aging preferences.

Nick Carter added, "And that leads us into talking about our tequila venture that we'll be coming out with. [We] just need to find a partner here in Mexico."

There are limited details about the Backstreet Boys' upcoming distilled liquor launch. But you don't see other boy bands taking on tequila (though Justin Timberlake — without his NSYNC brothers — has his own tequila venture, Sauza 901).

The Backstreet Boys relived their glory days with a 20-year anniversary album, "In a World Like This," released in 2013. They also came out with a documentary two years later called "Show 'Em What You're Made Of."

In a 2015 exclusive with Metro, the Backstreet Boys members recalled the hardest parts of shooting the film.

"You know, I think there were high moments and there were low moments even making the film," AJ McLean said. "Some were much more emotional than others. I think it was a great learning experience — a relearning experience — [for] each of us."

The Apple iPhone 8, iPhone 8 Plus and the iPhone X all feature wireless charging technology, and there are plenty of charging mats available for Apple's latest devices GETTY IMAGES

Does wireless charging kill your iPhone battery?

Using a wireless charging pad may shorten the battery life of your iPhone.

LENYON WHITAKER
lenyon.whitaker@metro.us

Tech experts have already confirmed that cold and iPhone batteries don't mix, but will iPhone wireless charging also cause your battery life to shorten?

Wireless charging for mobile phones was first introduced early 2015 by Samsung when they released the Galaxy S6 and S6 edge mobile phones, giving smartphone users the ability to place their devices on a charging pad and watch their battery replenish.

Apple responded with the Apple Watch, which uses wireless charging technology.

The Apple iPhone 8, iPhone 8 Plus and the iPhone X all feature wireless charging technology and there are plenty of charging mats available for Apple's latest devices. If you have an older iPhone and want to get in on the wireless charging action, there are companies that make protective cases that support wireless charging. Apple has plans to release an iPhone charging pad in the spring called Apple AirPower.

Is wireless charging bad for the battery?

ZDNet tech hardware blogger Adrian Kingsley-Hughes suspects that using the iPhone 8 or iPhone X on a wireless charging mat will shorten the lifespan of your battery faster than it would with a normal charger that plugs in. In the blog post, he used the battery lifespan stats found on Apple's Battery Service and Recycling page which says iPhone batteries are designed to "retain up to 80 percent of its original capacity at 500 complete charge cycles" on average. If you live in colder climate locations, your battery lifespan is shorter. Using a charging pad, Kingsley-Hughes expects to reach 500 complete charge cycles in about 20 months, whereas, under normal circumstances, an average iPhone battery will take around three years to reach 500 recharge cycles, according to his calculations.

Kingsley-Hughes explains further, providing technical insight on why iPhone wireless charging could be harmful to batteries.

"The issue is that when the iPhone is being charged using a cable, the phone is being powered by the cord [there is some load on the battery, but it's minimal], but when using wireless charging, the battery is what's powering the iPhone, with the wireless charger only being used to top up the battery," he wrote. "This means that by switching from a cable to a wireless charger, my battery isn't getting a break, and in turn, this is making me go through recharge cycles at an even faster rate."

From a nontechnical perspective, you might be more inclined to leave your iPhone on a charging mat if all you have to do is set it down on a flat surface. Just from that alone, your device may spend more time charging than it needs to.

Will AirPower kill my iPhone battery?

Wireless charging or inductive charging seems to be the wave of the future because of its simplicity. All you need to do is set your phone down on a small pad or mat and your device will charge. The Apple AirPower mat will be released this spring, so as of now it's uncertain if it will affect the lifespan of your iPhone battery

New scrutiny has presented a threat to Facebook's reputation, which was already under attack over Russians' use of Facebook tools to sway American voters. GETTY IMAGES

GOP lawmakers concerned by Facebook privacy breach

Several Republican lawmakers expressed concern over privacy violations on Sunday after media reports that a political consultancy that worked on President Donald Trump's campaign gained inappropriate access to 50 million Facebook users' data.

Republican Sen. Marco Rubio said he believed some internet companies have grown too fast to digest their responsibilities and obligations.

"So we'll learn more about this in the days to come. But yeah I'm disturbed by that," Rubio told NBC's "Meet the Press."

Sen. Rand Paul was asked whether people can trust companies like Facebook in the wake of the report about Cambridge Analytica taking data.

"People have to look into it. Whether or not it broke the law, absolutely, the privacy of the American consumer, the American individual, should be protected," Paul said on CNN.

Facebook disclosed the issue in a blog post on Friday, hours before media reports that conservative-leaning Cambridge Analytica, a data company known for its work on Trump's 2016 presidential campaign, was given access to the data and may not have deleted it.

Facebook said in a statement that a Cambridge University psychology professor had lied to the company and violated its policies by passing data to Cambridge Analytica from an app he had developed. It suspended the firm from Facebook.

Facebook did not immediately reply when asked on Sunday for a response to the lawmakers' comments. However, in a new statement Sunday, the company said it was conducting a "comprehensive internal and external review" to determine if the user data in question still existed.

Cambridge Analytica and the professor have denied violating Facebook's terms, according to media reports.

The scrutiny presented a new threat to Facebook's reputation, which was already under attack over Russians' use of Facebook tools to sway American voters before and after the 2016 U.S. elections.

"This is a big deal, when you have that amount of data, and the privacy violations there are significant."
Republican Sen. Jeff Flake

Republican Sen. Jeff Flake said he had a lot of questions about the data taken from Facebook, including who knew it had been taken and whether it is still being used.

"This is a big deal, when you have that amount of data, and the privacy violations there are significant," he told CNN's "State of the Union" program. "So the question is who knew it and when did they know it, how long did this go on and what happens to that data now."

Facebook faced new calls for regulation from Democratic senators on Saturday and was hit with questions about personal data safeguards, but it was unclear whether the Congress would act.

Rep. Adam Schiff, the top Democrat on the House Intelligence Committee, said more investigation was needed.

"We need to find out what we can about the misappropriation of the privacy, the private information of tens of millions of Americans," he said on ABC's "This Week."

Also on ABC, Sen. James Lankford, a Republican, said it was not known whether the incident was connected to the Trump campaign. REUTERS

Marijuana dispensary creates new THC lip balm

This is just another advancement in the world of "marijuana as medicine," said Ermont Director of Operations Seth Yaffe.

KRISTIN TOUSSAINT
kristin.toussaint@metro.us

Cannabis connoisseurs are doing more with marijuana than ever, creating all sorts of edibles, tinctures and topicals. Now, a Massachusetts dispensary has developed a THC-infused lip balm.

Ermont Inc., a medical marijuana dispensary in Quincy, Massachusetts and the mastermind behind the marijuana-infused frozen pizza, recently unveiled its latest creation: a medicated lip balm made with coconut oil, beeswax, shea butter, eucalyptus and lemon oil and 5 milligrams of THC.

"Rather than smoking something or eating an edible, the aspect of using a topical is something we've been pushing the boundaries on," said Seth Yaffe, director of operations at Ermont.

"We came up with the idea [because] it's cold, a lot of people are going skiing or snowboarding, and there's a lot of chapped lips," he said. "And we wanted to do an extremely low-dosage topical so that people can use it throughout the day."

Tetrahydrocannabinol, or THC, is just one chemical (or cannabinoid) within the cannabis plant. THC is the highest psychoactive found in cannabis, Yaffe said, but the low dose in this lip balm wouldn't bring on any psychoactive effects.

Instead, it will help with anxiety, pain relief, inflammation, healing wounds and dryness, he said.

"People can carry it around and not worry about overmedicating or being zoned out of it they usually feel that way from THC," he added. Plus, for those want to be a bit more discreet in their medical marijuana usage, lip balm is an easy answer.

Future versions of this product will also include cannabis terpenes — basically the essential oils of the cannabis plant that give a specific strain its smell, taste and particular effects.

By adding those in, Ermont can make "strain-specific lip

"Instead of popping a pill or drinking an elixir or something like that, we're able to really figure out different ways our body can consume natural medicine."

Seth Yaffe, director of operations at Ermont Inc.

balms," Yaffe said.

Yaffe believes Ermont is the first dispensary in Massachusetts to develop THC lip balm, and even he's a bit surprised by the advancement. To him, it shows a burgeoning industry that is constantly making advancements, which are really changing things for those who use marijuana as medicine.

"For us, the most important thing is the relationship we have with our patients. Sometimes we see 200 to 400 patients a day," he said. "We try to elicit a lot of feedback and get a better idea of what people are looking for, how to consume cannabis throughout the course of their life that makes it easier and less clinical."

"Instead of popping a pill or drinking an elixir or something like that," he added, "we're able to really figure out different ways our body can consume natural medicine."

Trump to unveil plan seeking death penalty for drug dealers

The roll out of the plan will be the latest White House action aimed at addressing a U.S. drug abuse crisis that is causing thousands of overdose deaths a year.

President Donald Trump will unveil a plan on Monday to combat the opioid addiction crisis that includes seeking the death penalty for drug dealers and urging Congress to toughen sentencing laws for drug traffickers, White House officials said on Sunday.

The White House plan will also seek to cut opioid prescriptions by a third over the next three years by promoting practices that reduce overprescription of opioids in federal healthcare programs, officials told a news briefing.

"The Department of Justice will seek the death penalty against drug traffickers when it's appropriate under current law."

Andrew Bremberg

Trump will outline his proposals at an event in New Hampshire, which has been hit hard by the opioid epidemic. Trump has said the United States will need "toughness" to reverse current trends.

"The Department of Justice will seek the death penalty against drug traffickers when it's appropriate under current law," said Andrew Bremberg, director of Trump's Domestic Policy Council, in the briefing detailing the plan.

The White House did not offer any specific examples of when it would be appropriate to seek the death penalty for drug dealers and referred further questions to the Justice Department.

Current federal law allows for the death penalty in certain drug cases including murder related to a drug trafficking offense and murder committed during a drug-related drive-by shooting, according to the Death Penalty Information Center, a nonprofit capital punishment monitor.

It is unclear how this new plan will affect federal prosecutions.

Trump raised the issue of using the death penalty for drug dealers at a rally in Pennsylvania earlier this month. He has repeatedly said individual drug dealers are responsible for thousands of deaths.

The White House is also asking lawmakers to lower the amount of drug possession that triggers mandatory minimum sentences for certain opioids "to match the new reality of drugs like fentanyl, which are lethal in much, much smaller doses," Bremberg said.

According to the Centers for Disease Control and Prevention, 42,000 people died from opioid overdoses in 2016, the latest year with publicly available data.

In addition to pursuing street dealers, the plan directs the Justice Department to aggressively go after criminally negligent doctors and pharmacies and to take criminal and civil actions against opioid manufacturers that break the law.

The proposals will also seek to help those addicted to opioids by expanding access to treatment facilities. REUTERS

TRUMP'S AMERICA

LOOK WHO'S NEXT ON THE WHITE HOUSE FIRING LINE

Special counsel Robert Mueller might be next on the president's "to fire" list. GETTY IMAGES

ELLIS HENICAN

Analysis

Ready, aim … fire Robert Mueller!

Isn't that where Donald Trump is heading next? He's sending out some dire signals, that's for sure.

In a barrage of increasingly furious weekend tweets, the angry president complained with fresh bitterness about the terrible unfairness of the special counsel investigation that's closing in on him: "The Mueller probe should never have been started … no collusion … no crime … Fake Dossier … Crooked Hillary and the DNC … WITCH HUNT! … lying James Comey … 13 hardened Democrats, some big Crooked Hillary supporters, and zero Republicans. … And yet, there is NO COLLUSION!"

"If [Trump tried to fire Mueller], it would be the beginning of the end of his presidency."

Sen. Lindsey Graham

If Twitter had its own greatest hits albums, that right there would be the one for @realDonaldTrump.

After tweet-firing Secretary of State Rex Tillerson and then further sliming the FBI's freshly fired Andrew McCabe, the president is now explicitly targeting the biggest threat of all. A Mueller whacking feels so imminent, even pro-Trump Sen. Lindsey Graham felt duty-bound to speak up on Sunday. "As I've said before," the South Carolina Republican told CNN's Jake Tapper, "if he tried to do that, it would be the beginning of the end of his presidency."

A clear warning, this is called.

When it comes to Trump administration firings, it's never the ones who deserve it most. This White House, loaded as it is with lightweights and sycophants, is certainly a target-rich environment: Princess Ivanka. Her know-it-all husband, Jared. Clueless cabinet secretaries like Betsy DeVos (sec. of charter schools), Ben Carson (sec. of privatizing public housing), Scott Pruitt (sec. of environmental degradation) and Rick Perry (sec. of giving the energy companies whatever they want).

Why not fire some of them?

Instead, it's the relative grown-ups who find themselves on the shakiest ground — a roster that now includes chief of staff John Kelly, national security adviser H.R. McMaster and Attorney General Jeff Sessions.

Don't bet on their futures, either.

All the zen in the world might not save you from going gray. ISTOCK

President Obama in February 2008 ISTOCK

And almost 10 years later? An elder Obama in May 2017 ISTOCK

Does stress really cause gray hair?

It's not so much a black-and-white issue.

MEAGAN MORRIS
letters@metro.us

Take a look at photos of a president — any president — at the beginning and the end of their terms. What do you notice?

They all look a whole lot older at the end of their service, complete with new wrinkles and plenty of grays. Part of that is just due to aging by four to eight years (for the most part), but we assume a lot of it comes from carrying the weight of the world on their shoulders. But is that actually the case?

Most men start seeing grey strands pop up around 30, and most women around age 35, but family genetics has a whole lot to do with things, and results in some people going salt-and-pepper as young as high school, whilst others never see a white hair.

The actual graying process starts deep inside our hair follicles — all 100,000-plus of them. In those follicles, epidermal cells called keratinocytes build by stacking on top of each other and eventually dying, leaving keratin behind.

Keratin is colorless, but gives our hair (and skin and nails) texture and strength. As hair grows, another group of cells known melanocytes creates melanin that comes in two colors — dark brown or black (eumelanin) and yellow or red (pheomelanin) — and combines to create our hair colors.

Gray hair doesn't have that melanin, so when a hair goes from an active growth phase to a resting phase it falls out before the process starts again. However, keratinocytes live longer than melanocyte cells, so the hair still grows, but without the pigment it had before.

So now I'm stressing

Stress hormones might impact melanocytes, dermatologist Jennifer Lin told Scientific American.

"There is evidence that local expression of stress hormones mediate the signals, instructing melanocytes to deliver melanin to keratinocytes," she told the magazine. "Conceivably, if that signal is disrupted, melanin will not deliver pigment to your hair."

"There's been debate over the relationship between the lack of vitamin B [and the presence of gray hair], and low vitamin B can be influenced by stress," Sandra Gilman, trichologist and educational director for The Elan Center for Trichology, added to The Huffington Post.

This is getting traumatic

Another thing that can impact the growth of greys: disruption due to trauma, surgery and other nutritional deficiencies.

"As the hair grows out of the follicle, various processes take place in a timely fashion to produce a shaft of hair with the correct color [genetically speaking]," Gilman said. "One of these processes involves the melanin-producing cells that are present and whose job it is to provide color to the hair during the hair-growth cycle. During this cycle, anything that interrupts the flow of events can cause the non-pigmentation of the hair shaft."

So while there's not a 100 percent guarantee that stress can cause grey hair, we can say with certainty that grey hair depends on genetics — and there's no one-size-fits-all answer. It might just be that we notice presidents — and celebrities — aging because they're in the public eye.

And it turns out they're just like us!

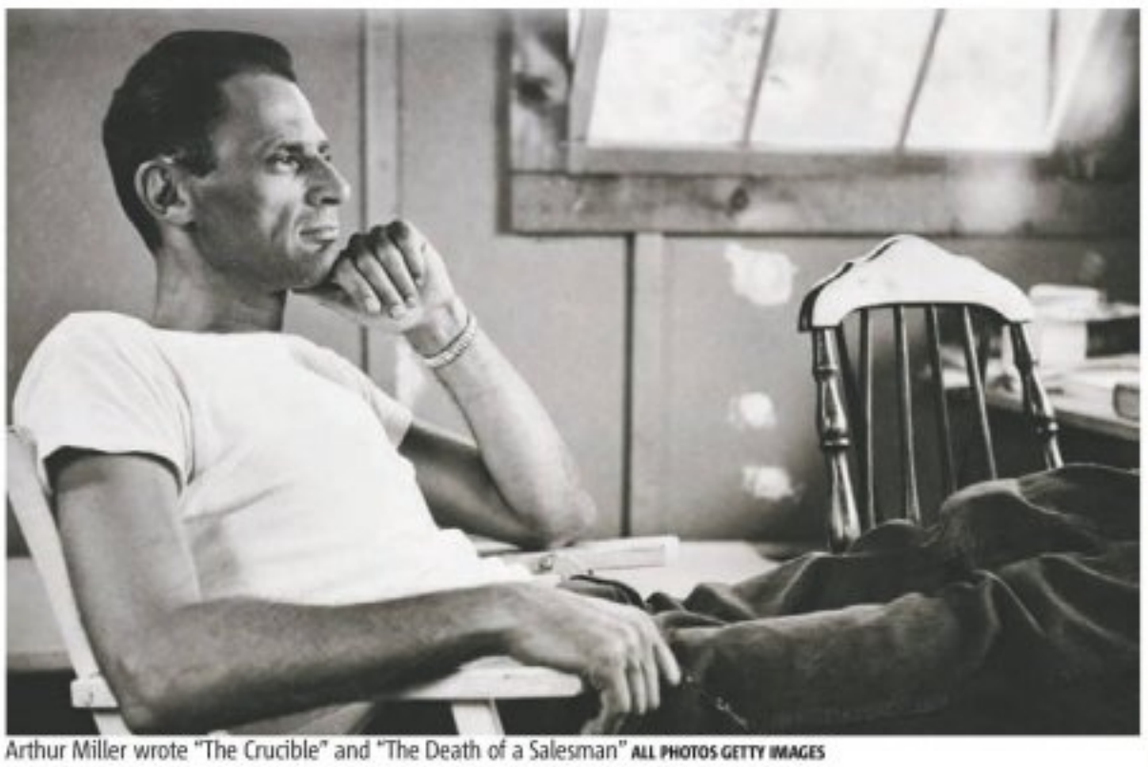
Who exactly was 'Arthur Miller: Writer'?

His daughter Rebecca reveals all in a new documentary, airing tonight on HBO.

GREGORY WAKEMAN
Gregory.Wakeman@metro.us



Arthur Miller wrote "The Crucible" and "The Death of a Salesman" ALL PHOTOS GETTY IMAGES

Arthur Miller is one of the greatest playwrights of the 20th century. But according to his daughter, Rebecca Miller, there was a side to the writer of "Death of a Salesman," "The Crucible" and "A View from the Bridge" that the public never saw.

That's exactly what she wants to present to the world with her HBO documentary "Arthur Miller: Writer." Metro recently spoke with Miller and discussed her legendary father.

When did you start filming your dad?
I originally was [just] shooting randomly. Then in about 1995 I decided to make it into a film. I wanted to get my father as he was. I knew that no one else could get that close to my father. I just felt that he was so different in his public persona in interviews than the man I knew.

I was harvesting scenes and information and stories he told that I loved. My first impulse was to capture his personality, and then it became about doing something more serious.

How was he different?
He was much more guarded. And a little bit defensive. He was just very dour [compared] to the person I knew. He would make occasional jokes on camera, but he was always very funny and aloof, and very unjudgemental. None of those things seemed to come through, and I wanted to show him in that different way.

Did your dad talk about his past successes as a playwright, or focus on the future?
He was certainly happy that he had written his past plays, but he was writing for the future. And he was writing like a younger man in some ways. His later work is very free and experimental — not that his first plays weren't. But it was tough because he was up against himself.

Your dad died in 2005. Did you need this time, emotionally, before you could return to the material?
I left it for years and then I went back to it when it felt like it was a boil on my back that I really had to lance off. I needed some perspective. I couldn't have finished this film when he was alive. It would have been too early, and I just wouldn't have been free.

What was something that you learned about your dad in this process?
When you do something like this with your parents, you see different elements to their personality. I saw more vulnerability and how wide open he was, and even his romance, all of which I never saw.

I also saw a tremendous amount of self-confidence that he had. By the end of his life he was much humbler. He was still fascinated and very much in love with human beings. But there's not that sense that he has to teach them — he's just bemused them.

"Arthur Miller: Writer" will air on HBO on Monday at 8 p.m.

How do you make the perfect hamburger?
We weigh in on each element.

LESS IS MORE

Want to add ingredients like lettuce and onion? Go for it — but remember that less is more. You don't want to distract from the meat.

BREAD

Rookie mistake? Grabbing straight from the bun bag. Instead lightly butter and toast on the inner-facing sides of the bread.

CHEESE

Traditionalists tend to opt for American, cheddar or Swiss. Seventy-five of chefs surveyed say cheese goes directly under the hamburger patty.

SAUCE

Try making your own: Fry two garlic cloves in a little oil, add tomato paste and a little water. Reduce the sauce for a few minutes and add ½ tablespoon of paprika, 1 tablespoon of sugar, 2 tablespoons of apple cider vinegar and salt and pepper to taste. Take that, Heinz!

HAMBURGER

Use ground meat that's 80/20 when it comes to fat content. You might feel better ordering the leaner stuff, but this is a cheat day sort of sandwich. Any leaner and you'll be stuck with a dry bit of 'burg.

"Smash!" signs George Motz when autographing his book. Considered one of the biggest hamburger experts in the world by "The New York Times," he is the author of "The Great American Burger Book: How to Make Authentic Regional Hamburgers at Home."

The "king of hamburgers" is an advocate of the traditional recipe and claims to have eaten more than 10,000 of them for his book's research.

Motz starts his classic burger by making a ball of raw ground beef without seasoning. The sphere goes on to the plate in this format, where it receives a little salt. Next, "smash"! The cook uses his spatula to crush the ball of meat and transform it into the special attraction. A bit of time (to taste) on one side, then some more on the other, finely sliced onion on top, cheese at the last moment of cooking, pickles and other condiments on a lightly toasted bun, and you're good to go.

The preparation is fast and takes on the "less is more" style.

"The hamburger should fit in your hand and be easy to bite into. If you need cutlery to eat it, it's not a hamburger," says Motz.

Contentious! No seasoning? No mention of bacon or BBQ sauce, let alone aioli mayo? Motz insists that the purist version is the sandwich at its prime.

That said, in his book Motz gets into every region's signature sandwich. He includes recipes specific to almost every state, so you'll be able to cater to the most specific, die-hard out-of-towner.

And even if you aren't catering for a crowd, "The Great American Burger Book" makes for an interesting read, if only to learn the subtle differences between burgers of the Northeast.

Q&A

journalist and specialist on hamburgers

What's the perfect hamburger?
It is made simply, with fresh meat. The burger is going to be good if you can taste the meat. The other accompaniments are not important. You can put greens, vegetables and cheese on it, it's really all about the the meat.

Thoughts on fast food burgers?
I grew up eating those things, but now I know better. Chains are large, and it's impossible to maintain quality. The ingredients aren't fresh. Thankfully local specialists are around to raise the bar, and keep up tradition.

How to make an authentic

Vento admits he's a "wiz wit" kind of guy. ALL PHOTOS PROVIDED

The owner of Geno's Steaks tells us his cheesesteak secrets.

JENNIFER LOGUE
jennifer.logue@metro.us

With National Cheesesteak Day coming up this weekend, foodies around Philly are out there ordering up our local sandwich in full force. But what if you want to make a great cheesesteak at home?

We reached out to owner of Geno's Steaks, Geno Vento, to talk about how to make a Philly cheesesteak like the pros.

Start with the right ingredients

"Any good cheesesteak starts with thinly sliced ribeye meat," he says. "When we cut it, we put it in stacks so that when we go to grab it, it's like a deck of cards — it just falls apart on the grill."

How thin should the meat be sliced, exactly?

"I've never had anyone ask that question! In the 25 years I've been doing this," he jokes. "Thin enough to get the spatula underneath it to flip it, but not thin enough to see through."

Time to heat things up

According to Vento, leave room temperature meat on the grill anywhere from 40 seconds to a minute.

"Wait until the sides are starting to sizzle and curl up," he advises. "That's when you want to put your spatula underneath the meat to flip it over."

Go full-on cheat day

Don't be scared of the fat — it helps tenderize the meat, gives it flavor and even helps lubricate the grill.

"Some customers want to have every piece of fat taken off," Vento says. "We tell them if we do that, it will be like shoe leather. It's not like you're eating prime ribeye."

Philly cheesesteak

Geno Vento of Geno's Steaks shares his cheesesteak secrets.

concerned, many cheesesteak connoisseurs will say that this component is what makes our local cheesesteaks stand in a league of their own.

"They say it has something to do with Philly water that makes the bread come out the way that it does," Vento says. "[You should use] an Italian roll that's soft on the inside and has a soft crust on the top. It [should be] like a soft pillow. You put the meat inside and it holds it all together."

Geno's Steaks gets their bread from Liscio's, and even has their own special variety.

"My father was so particular about it that we have our own, so when we order, we have a Geno's steak roll," Vento says. "It has two slits, not three. It's baked to a certain size, has a certain color, a certain crispness on top, and 97 percent of the time the bread looks exactly the same."

Topping time. How about that cheese?

If you're opting for whiz, it gets spread on the roll first — then the meat goes in. If instead you're cooking with provolone or American cheese, it gets put onto the meat as it's cooking.

Then of course, there's the matter of onions

"We use a white onion that we saute in a little bit of vegetable oil and cook on the grill. We caramelize it until it's translucent, so it has a little softness but still has a bite to it," Vento says. "Kind of soft, like al dente, I would say."

He's a "whiz wit" (onions) kind of guy, in case you're wondering!

"It's really a simple recipe."

It makes sense that if one job's best done in flip-flops and another requires heavy boots you'll find them in different places. ALL IMAGES ISTOCK

Find the right job

Refine your searches online to help you save time and find the job you ACTUALLY want.

PAT KING
patrick.king@metro.us

Job search sites can be extremely helpful when looking for work. But often it feels like you're sending your resume out into an endless void, where responses from employers never make their way back to you.

While go-to's like Linkedin, indeed, and — let's face it — Craigslist can yield the occasional lead, sometimes narrowing your searches to more specific sites is the best approach to finding worthwhile positions in your particular field. It only stands to reason that a bartender and a banker look in different places.

So stop wasting everyone's time — especially your own — and do some thinking before you search.

The service industry

While the best approach to finding work in a bar or restaurant is always going to be to meet the manager in person when you drop off a resume, it's unrealistic to think you can hand stop by dozens of places all over town in one day.

PoachedJobs.com is a great resource. Just like a LinkedIn, Poached Jobs narrows searches to the very position you're after (and let's face it, a potential line cook is not potential waitstaff, and a head chef's got to look to a different place than, say, a beverage sales rep).

Freelance writing

As writers and journalists know, getting that first "in" is really the hardest step. Building up your portfolio with clips is a giant mountain you'll have to climb before landing a stable full-time — or part-time — position at a "real deal" publication.

That's where sites like Problogger.com and TheWriteLife.com come in. Both cater toward aspiring journalists or full-time freelancers looking for paid gigs. Most of the postings are for one-off pieces, but many publications offer part-time write-for-cash gigs that can last for months. And in the journalism world, sometimes that's the best you could ask for.

You might also consider searching within a creative staffing agency's listings. Big ones like CreativeCircle.com have listings all over the country, and in addition to scribes search site for you are always looking for design types as well as tech heads.

Handy work

If building things and handiwork are skills you've got in your tool belt, searching for such positions on Craigslist is probably the bane of your existence. Those jobs can get you cash quick, but do they ever lead to anything substantial or long-term?

Initially founded as a staffing service for the aerospace and defense industries, Aerotek.com has become a great resource for anyone looking to find a lucrative position in a hands-on field. While it's not one of those cut-and-dry "here's a search bar" kind of job search sites, necessarily, once you dig into all of the categories you can pretty much find any form of niche position in the engineering or industrial work industries.

Another alternative to Craigslist, though still primarily good for one-offs, is to build up a profile and client base on Handy.com and TaskRabbit.com. Create a profile that's specific to what you want to do, take on a few jobs for less money than you'd like at first, and then as you build a set of stellar reviews you can raise your hourly rate. Some Rabbits make a full-time salary building IKEA furniture, or doing meal prep for carb-counters, and any number of other chores. What starts as some extra money on the side can turn into 40 hours a week — if you want it to.

Get out!

When things are getting stale in your life and the last thing you want to do is go to another deadend interview, don't be afraid to REALLY shake things up.

Some people have that one friend who spent a couple years galavanting the world, working totally obscure jobs along the way, not worrying at all about where they'd land next (let alone when the next nor'easter would hit). "That could never be me," you think in response, as you hate-tap your way through their Instagram feed.

GreenheartTravel.org is a job search site that helps you find teaching and volunteer work in different countries around the world. Whether it means being a summer camp counselor in Italy, teaching English in Columbia, or getting a marketing internship in Thailand — Greenheart's like the travel agent connecting you with your dream working vacation.

Follow your dreams.

Sixers' Brown has a very strong case for NBA Coach of the Year

The Sixers are a playoff team, and it's thanks to head coach Brett Brown.

ANDY JASNER
@AndyJasner
sports@metro.us

The Sixers have two home games this week, hosting the Hornets Monday and the Grizzlies Wednesday.. GETTY IMAGES

Over the last five seasons, no coach in the NBA has gone through more adversity than Brett Brown.

The 76ers coach may disagree.

Look at the path the former highly successful assistant in San Antonio had to endure when coming to Philadelphia. Sam Hinkie's disgraceful Tank-A-Thon led to 75 victories over four seasons and players such as Casper Ware, Sonny Weems and Kendall Marshall. The Sixers were lucky to reach 10 wins a couple years ago and avoid breaking the franchise's nine-win mark in 1972-73.

Finally, after four years of being awful, the Sixers are relevant. They're 38-30 and eight games above .500 for the first time since 2012. They're likely headed for the playoffs barring a catastrophic collapse. They're fun, young and exciting.

Ben Simmons is making a strong case for Rookie of the Year. Joel Embiid is making incredible progress after missing his first two seasons with injuries and only playing 31 games last year.

J.J. Redick has been a terrific free agent addition with his shooting and leadership.

T.J. McConnell is one of the most improved players in the league.

Dario Saric is turning into a legitimate threat every night.

Veteran pickups such as Marco Belinelli and Ersan Ilyasova have loomed large.

Are there issues? Of course. Hence the ongoing adversity.

Robert Covington has been less than consistent since signing a $62 million extension. Amir Johnson looks old. Richaun Holmes probably needs to be on the court more. The bench overall is razor thin.

Through it all, the Sixers are 38-30 and look to be ready for playoff basketball following the final 14 regular season games.

Brown has done an outstanding coaching job and it's a journey which started five seasons ago through so much turmoil and tanking. No other coach likely would have lasted this long. Even Gregg Popovich, Brown's mentor with the Spurs, has repeatedly said he never would have been able to survive all these losses.

Brown has been the players' coach, mentor, teacher, psychologist and spokesperson. The Sixers wouldn't be in this position without him. Other coaches will be nominated for Coach of the Year.

Brown deserves the award.

He never stops teaching. The players are learning and developing.

"I think it lets them know, because we've been on the other side of that as well, that we do have the people," Brown said following the Sixers' 38th win of the season Friday night against the Brooklyn Nets. "I believe we have the structure. They have shown they have the poise to be able to walk a game down. I liked what they did situationally fouling appropriately when we were up three and waiting and waiting and then T.J. used a foul. I think that the big defensive rebound that Joel had on that missed free throw was big. I feel like schematically we all feel comfortable as a team that we can walk a game down, and those guys did that."

The playoffs will be the next challenge. It won't be easy, but nothing about this journey has been simple. Brown has been there for every painful — and now exciting — step.

Guiding young teams through grueling seven-game series in the postseason is much more challenging than any regular season game.

Brown will be ready to lead the Sixers.

The Coach of the Year deserves this award and the reward of the postseason.

Projecting Phillies' 25 man opening day roster

Opening day is less than two weeks away as spring training continues.

EVAN MACY
evan.macy@metro.us

Opening day is right around the corner. Before long, the Phillies will whittle their roster down to their best 25 players before March 29's opener in Atlanta. Here is our best educated guess as to what that 25 will be.

POSITION PLAYERS

JP Crawford will make his first opening day MLB start. ALL PHOTOS GETTY IMAGES

1. Cesar Hernandez, 2B

As much as Scott Kingery as impressed this spring and last season Hernandez will get the nod to start the season.

2. Odubel Herrera, CF

He was the future of the franchise two seasons ago when he burst on the scene. Now it's time to play like an All-Star.

3. Carlos Santana, 1B

Santata will anchor the Phils' line up with discipline and power.

4. Rhys Hoskins, RF

Can Hoskins lead the Phillies in homers again?

5. Maikel Franco, 3B

Like Herrera, Franco needs to show he belongs as a franchise cornerstone.

6. Nick Williams, LF

Williams will get his first extended look as he tries to prove himself as a corner outfielder with pop.

7. J.P. Crawford, SS

Crawford was the Phillies top prospect for years. His day has finally come.

8. Jorge Alfaro, C

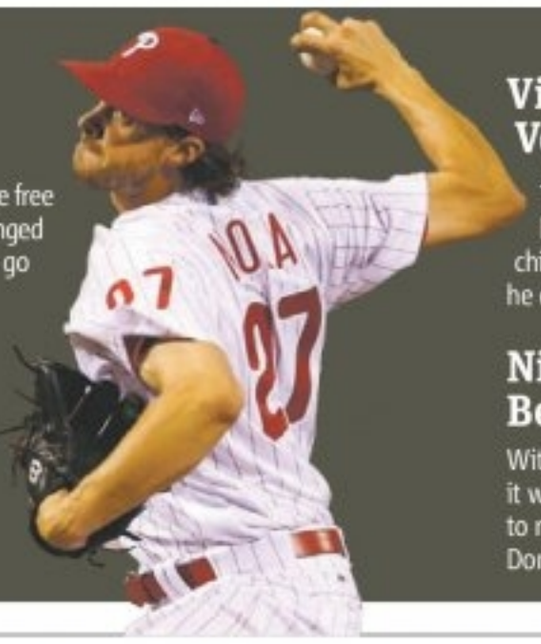
Alfaro has all the tools of a big league catcher and could be the next Carlos Ruiz.

The Bench

Aaron Altherr, Cameron Rupp, Scott Kingery, Pedro Florimon, Ryan Flaherty

Phillies new skipper Gabe Kapler will emphasize durability with his bench, which is why veterans Florimon and Flaherty, guys who can play multiple positions, look like good bets. Kingery too, is playing some third base in camp while Altherr can play all three outfield spots. Rupp will back up Alfaro and continue to be a locker room leader.

PITCHERS



Jake Arrieta, SP

The true ace and big name free agent the Phillies have longed for. He should be ready to go when the season starts.

Aaron Nola, SP

However, the opening day start might go to Nola who really is the ace 1B of this team.

Vincent Velasquez, SP

The Phillies are holding out hope that the strikeout machine Velasquez once showed he could be will return.

Nick Pivetta, Ben Lively, SP

With Jerad Eickhoff on the DL, it will be up to the youngsters to round out the rotation. Don't be surprised if more than just these two hurlers occupy the bottom of the rotation.

The Bullpen

Mark Leiter Jr., Hector Neris, Pat Neshek, Luis Garcia, Tommy Hunter, Edubray Ramos, Adam Morgan

The bullpen looks like a point of strength, at least on paper, with Neris set to close again, Neshek to set up, and Hunter and Garcia eating important late innings.
